PROJECT WITH TRI-STATE STEELHEADERS IS FIRST SALMON IN SCHOOLS PROGRAM IN THE AREA

By Brianna Wray | THE TIMES

WAITSBURG—Students at Waitsburg Elementary are taking on a new responsibility this year: raising salmon. First-grade teacher Stephanie Hinchliffe is leading the project with the help of Andrew Bassler from the Tri-State Steelheaders.

The project made its way onto Waitsburg Elementary School radar through a chance meeting.

“My husband [Waitsburg city administrator Randy Hinchliffe] heard about this organization looking for a teacher willing to raise these salmon and I said—uh, yeah I want to take this on, it’s so cool!” said Hinchliffe.

Bassler, education coordinator and avid fly-fisherman, is passionate about educational outreach and partnerships, working directly with kids to explain the necessity of sustainability in terms they can understand.

Bassler brought a 40-gallon freshwater tank for the 125 eggs in the first graders’ charge. Wild eggs typically remain in the gravel of a riverbed throughout the winter as the embryos develop. There the eggs are subject to danger from predators, he said.

Generally in the wild, the eggs will hatch in the spring and alevins will emerge. The rate of the egg development is dependent on water

“Roald Dahl’s Willy Wonka” Starts Nov. 15

18TH ANNUAL TVAC FALL MUSICAL PRODUCTION AT LIBERTY THEATER WILL RUN THROUGH DEC. 8

By Michele Smith | THE TIMES

DAYTON—Whimsical costumes, confectionary props and a 70s vibe will captivate the audience that turns out to see the Touchet Valley Arts Council’s 18th-annual fall musical production of “Roald Dahl’s Willy Wonka,” which will debut at the Liberty Theater on Nov. 15.

The show is based on the book, “Willy Wonka & the Chocolate Factory,” by Roald Dahl, and tells the story of the enigmatic Willy Wonka, who stages a contest by hiding golden tickets in five candy bars made in his candy factory. The prize for the five who find the tickets is a free tour of the factory, and a lifetime supply of candy.

With the exception of Charlie Bucket, played by Lila Hutchens in this production, the winners are all insufferable brats. The action builds when the winners begin their tour of the Wonka factory, and the consequences for not following Wonka’s rules.

“Roald Dahl’s Willy Wonka” is directed by Liberty Theater stage veteran Brenda Henderson, who has been involved on stage as an actor, choreographer, or as the director or co-director, since 2003.

Elizabeth Arabelos-Jagelski, the Production Chair and President of TVAC, is quick to credit Henderson for stepping up, especially after last year’s arduous production “Anna and the King of Siam”.

She also recognizes George Gagnon and “the guys” who are building all the sets and props, the stage crew Louie Gagnon and Allen Huwe, lighting director Terran Villaro, scenery artist Laurie Nichols, pianist Jim Thorn, who has been part of the orchestra and accompaniment for many years, and Mary Luce for costume design, along with choreographers Patti Jo Amerein, Cindy Philbrook, and Tracy Barron.

“We’re so honored to get them to step up and do that,” Arabelos-Jagelski said.

It seems fair to say TVAC productions are Wait's Mill was the first commercial building in Waitsburg and was the original reason for the town's existence. The mill was built in 1865 and operated continuously until 1957. It is listed as one of Washington's Most Endangered Historical Properties by the Washington Trust for Historic Preservation. A $30,000 grant has been awarded by the Kinsman Foundation of Milwaukie, Ore., to the Blue Mountain Resource Conservation and Development Council (RC&D) for the purpose of assisting with roof repairs on Wait's Mill in Waitsburg.

Amber R Dobbs-Woodworth, daughter of Lori and Terry Dobbs of Dayton, received Whitman's 2008 Town-Gown Award from President George Bridges at the Walla Walla Valley Chamber of Commerce annual awards banquet Nov 5. Family members in attendance included Dobbs-Woodworth's parents: her husband, Val Woodworth, mother in law Gerry Woodworth, and her grandmother, Doris Durham, and Mrs. Durham's husband, Bill Walla Walla County officials and wheat growers have been talking with officials of Boise Cascade Corp. of LaGrande, Ore., about possibly growing wheat to sell to Boise Cascade for the manufacture of particle board used to make furniture Hatton said Boise Cascade has been putting about 10 percent straw in some batches of wood chips to produce particle board. He said furniture makers who used the straw-added board could not tell the difference between it and 100 percent wood-chip board.

Multi-horned and hardy Jacob sheep are easily recognizable by their polka-dotted fleece. Jess Miller, of Dayton, has six of these unusual sheep. He became interested in the breed several years ago. Just where Jacob sheep originated is the cause of much speculation, according to Tom Kozlowski, of the Jacob Sheep Conservancy Breed Organization and Registry in Girard, Penn. One of Jacob sheep's unique features is their horns. They usually have two to four horns, up to 12 inches.

COMMENT

RANDY HINCHLIFFE: CITY OF WAITSBURG

Fall Update from the City of Waitsburg

With colder temperatures and leaves starting to fall, I thought I would provide residents with some information regarding fall activities associated with the city.

First, there has been a Washington State Department of Ecology burn ban in effect since January 1, 2007; meaning you cannot burn leaves or branches. The city does not pick up leaves, so please do not rake or blow them into the street as it actually can clog our street sweeper. Instead, residents of the city can dispose of their leaves in the leaf bin at the city shop in either bags or in loose bunches. Limbs and other debris can normally be hauled to Waste Water Treatment Plant for disposal, but due to the back log of limbs, we are not currently taking any additional material.

Second, colder temperatures can lead to pipe freezing, so if you plan to leave for an extended period of time or head south for the winter, you might want to consider contacting the city about turning your water off to help avoid your pipes freezing and breaking. Also it's a good idea to turn off outside faucets and insulate irrigation boxes where needed.

Lastly, with the installation of our new water meters, there will no longer be a need to skip reading water meters during the winter months, eliminating the process known as winter prorate. This will allow the city to read meters all year long and potentially spot leaks before they turn into major issues, leading to very high water bills and flooded basements.

As always, should anyone have any questions about anything the city is doing, they are welcome to contact me at city hall or through the city's website at www.cityofwaitsburg.com.

Portland Shipyard Building Wave of the Future

By Don C. Brunell

Shipyard workers in Portland are building the first commercial-scale wave energy buoy which, if it works, could be part of a system providing electricity to communities along our nation's coastline.

Vigor's shipyard has a $6.5 million contract to construct an 826-ton buoy which can generate 1.25 MW (megawatts) of electricity. Its principle selling point is it generates electricity without CO2 or other greenhouse gas emissions.

Vigor estimates each buoy would offset 3,000 tons of carbon releases a year and, if tied together with 100 similar generating platforms, could provide enough electricity to power 18,750 homes.

While it may not be the first commercial wave energy project, it will be one of the largest. The first started generating electricity in 2000 on remote Scotland's Islay Island, inhabited by 3,200 people.

The Portland project is jointly funded by the Irish and American governments. An Irish company, Ocean Energy, is the impetus behind the project, which it started 15 years ago with a small test buoy in Galway Bay, along the northwest Irish coast.

Even though the first device broke its anchor in a severe winter storm, Ocean Energy believes it has the technology to move forward. When completed, the buoy will be towed to Hawaii and anchored in the Navy's wave energy test site off Oahu's shores.

According to The Irish Times, tidal power generation is an integral part of Ireland's offshore renewable energy development plan. The newspaper identifies potential resources of more than 70 GW (gigawatts) of electricity coming from Irish waters — more than 14 times Ireland's current energy demand.

For background, the U.S. Energy Dept. estimates it takes 431 large wind turbines and 3.125 million solar panels to produce a gigawatt of electricity, so the Irish wave electricity program is very ambitious.

Islands, such as Ireland and Hawaii, stand to benefit the most because high electricity rates have been attributed to the difficulty of establishing power grids and obtaining reasonably priced generating fuels. There is history of reliance on either coal or oil to generate electricity. Wave energy offers a viable alternative to provide ample power supplies at lower electric costs.

They are not blessed with inexpensive hydropower which people on our west coast enjoy. Not surprisingly, Hawaiian electric rates are the nation's highest — more than triple the rates in Washington.

Hawaiian electric utilities focused efforts on switching from higher CO2 oil to Liquefied National Gas (LNG) and on renewables. Utility leaders are bringing more roof-top solar on line and renewables are now 30 percent of electricity supply. However, in stormy Ireland, solar gains are much harder, so they turned to wave power.

Ocean waves contain tremendous energy, the U.S. Energy Information Agency reported. "The theoretical annual energy potential of waves off the coasts of the United States is estimated to be as much as 2.64 trillion kilowatt hours, or the equivalent of about 66 percent of U.S. electricity generation in 2017."

Ocean Energy believes wave energy will have an estimated $18 billion impact on Ireland's economy by 2050.

"Similarly, the U.S. has a substantial wave energy resource, which could deliver up to 15 percent. In Oregon, the estimated potential value to the local economy is $2.4 billion per year with an associated 13,630 jobs," Vigor reported.

While wave energy is renewable and environmentally friendly, it is not suitable for all locations. Towns near oceans will directly benefit, and the impact of the marine ecosystem, vessel traffic, noise and visual pollution, and performance in rough weather, is yet to be determined.

Hopefully, wave power can be perfected and become an important part of the electric grid.

Judy Miller is New CCHS Clinic Director

By Michele Smith | THE TIMES

DAYTON—Judy Miller, a former Center Manager for Lincare in Walla Walla, is the new Clinic Director for Columbia Family Clinic and Waitsburg Clinic.

Miller has been on the job Oct. 22, getting to know the staff in the clinics and hospital.

An assessment of the clinics was recently performed by an outside consulting firm, and Miller said she and the staff will be looking into changes that will enhance the patient experience.

Miller and her husband, Miles, like to spend time viewing the area wildlife while staying at the Mack-Kay-Alto family farm, owned by the Miller family.

"We've been coming here for a few years," Miller said. "It's a nice transition."

Miller said she doesn't miss the 'hustle and bustle' of city life. She has worked as a private day care manager in Portland, as an associate director of marketing for Belmont Psychiatric Hospital in the Bay Area, and as a regional manager for sales and marketing of medical devices.

"Judy comes to us at a perfect time where we are increasingly focused on our patients' experience, growing market share, expanding services and integrating behavioral health in our primary care clinics," said CEO Shane McGuire in an announcement to staff.

McGuire said Miller will help CCHS achieve goals for patient-centered medical care at home, and for prioritizing and refining other population-based health initiatives.

Endowment Being Created for 4-H Membership Fees

By Michele Smith | THE TIMES

DAYTON—An endowment to pay for all annual 4-H memberships has just been announced by WSU Dayton Extension Agent Paul Carter.

In 2017 the state instituted an annual $25 membership fee for attendance in 4-H, a move Carter says was discriminatory to families having financial difficulties. So he set about to see what could be done to help them.

Carter said he recently met with the Blue Mountain Community Foundation to start the process of creating an endowment. The initial need is for $10,000 to establish the endowment, with a target goal of reaching $50,000, he said.

"$50,000 is enough to generate membership costs," said Carter.

This year there were 92 youth enrolled in 4-H, and the cost to cover memberships was around $2,000, Carter said.

Carter said the endowment will be primarily used for paying membership enrollment fees for 4-H, but, secondarily, for other member events and activities, as well as scholarships, when additional revenue funds are available.

Disbursements will be reviewed and managed by the local County Extension Director or Agent, the County Extension Office Manager, the County 4-H Coordinator and County Leader Council President or Treasurer, and will take place in February of each year, with the first distribution in 2020, he said.

Carter said he sees this community building opportunity as a long-term fix. "We are trying to help less fortunate people in our community," he said.

Checks can be made out to the Blue Mountain Community Foundation, "4-H enrollment fees" in the subject line, said Carter. Checks can be dropped off at the Columbia County Extension office at 137 E. Main St. in Dayton, or they can also be mailed directly to the Blue Mountain Community Foundation, at P.O. Box 603, Walla Walla, WA 99362.

supported in some way by most of the community. This year's cast and crew number 70.

"We're the same group working together," said Arabelos-Jagelski.

The team operates much the same way as a family does, she said. The older actors, like Chuck Reeves and Jack McCaw, pitch in to help the youngest.

Two families, the Zangers and the Calverts, and Dustin and Mariah Harter are traveling from the Walla Walla Valley, to participate in the production, which represents a huge time commitment on their part, said Arabelos-Jagelski.

Sean Calvert plays the part of Willy Wonka/Candy Man, and Dustin Harter is the head Oompa-Loompa, she said.

We think big. We're on a really good wave," Arabelos-Jagelski said about TVAC productions, in general.

Henderson agrees. "I love the team building aspect. We're always growing," she said. "I'd like to thank the community for supporting us, all the volunteers, and the audience. We couldn't do this without them," Henderson added.

"Roald Dahl's Willy Wonka" will begin its 13-performance run on Nov. 15 and run through Dec. 8.

On Family Night (Nov. 15) and Encore Family Night (Dec. 6), tickets are specially priced at $10. Tickets may be purchased online at libertytheater.org, or at the Liberty Theater box office, by calling (509) 382-1380. "I am Number Four" by Pittacus Lore
 With a movie by the same name released in 2011, this book is an excellent choice for any young adult reluctant readers. The story centers around "Number 4," an extraterrestrial from a planet called Lorien being hunted by warriors from a planet called Mogadore. The Lorians can only be defeated in the order of the numbers they were assigned, and the book begins with the death of number 3. Throughout the book Number 4 is on the run, but manages to fall in love and build a relationship or two. There's also plenty of action.

"Surviving Justice" compiled by Lola Vollen & Dave Eggers

This book is a collection of oral histories from 13 different people. These people come from all walks of life with vastly different stories, but were all imprisoned for crimes they did not commit. These stories include that of Paul Terry and Beverly Monroe. Terry spent twenty-seven years wrongfully imprisoned and emerged "psychologically devastated and barely able to communicate". Monroe was an organic chemist who was coerced into falsely confessing to the murder of her lover- she must rebuild from the ground up after seven years behind bars.

"Hidden Peril" by Irene Hannon

This book centers around Kristin Dane, the owner of a free trade store with international stock. The book kicks off with the murder of a monk, and follows the ensuing investigation. More murders occur and the common factor seems to be Kristin's shop. This novel is an interesting blend of thriller, and christian fiction. This novel is by the same author as the patron recommended series "Men of Valor."

Andrew Bassler describes the lifecycle of salmon in terms first graders can understand.

temperature. The students' tank is held consistently between 49-50 degrees. With more ideally regulated conditions, comes a higher yield.

"We got our eggs Oct. 17 and they're hatching as of this morning, the 29th. This is a little early," says Hinchliffe. "We were expecting Halloween babies."

A higher-than-average number of the eggs have survived, with only one seeming to have perished. The distinction is clear, the dead egg is white and inactive. The others will hatch as alevins.

The alevins break free of the egg, but have their yolk sacs attached to their bodies, absorbing the nutrients within until they are able to reach the surface of the water to gulp air. Doing this helps fill their swim bladder to gain neutral buoyancy, making swimming easier. Once an alevin can swim freely, it becomes a fry. Fry have eight fins to help them keep their position in rushing waters.

As the salmon develop vertical stripes and spots for camouflage, they become parr. Once the parr have grown to between 10 and 25 cm, they undergo the smolting process. This is a pre-adaptation necessary for the salt regulation required for ocean swimming.

From smolts, the salmon reach adulthood. If they're able to reproduce and make the journey again, they reach kelt status. However, mortality rates for salmon increase significantly following reproduction.

Mrs. Hinchliffe's first grade class is currently the only one participating, but the Tri-State Steelheaders have created useful curriculum and teaching materials available for first to fifth-grade levels.

Taking the example of the first graders' salmon success, the Salmon in Schools program may expand. Base funding for the Regional Fisheries Enhancement Groups, of which Tri-State Steelheaders is one, comes from a grant from the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service's Partners for Fish and Wildlife Program, a portion of state commercial and recreational fishing license fees, and excess egg and carcass sales administered by the Washington Department of Fish & Wildlife. More information on this organization can be found at tristatesteelheaders.com.

Tri-State Steelheaders is a community-based non-profit organization dedicated to promoting healthy salmon and steelhead populations in southeast Washington, northeast Oregon, and north central Idaho.

In order to achieve their mission of restoring sustainable populations of native salmonids, the group works closely with landowners, volunteers, tribes, conservation organizations, private corporations and state and federal agencies to implement education and research programs.

TEENY MCMUNN: MY RECIPE BOX

Keto Shrimp Scampi with Broccoli

I really debated about whether to repost last year's recipe, Sausage and Apple Stuffed Squash, because it is so fall-ish and a "dinner in the oven, but I saw this one. I like shrimp and find it a nice break from beef, chicken and pork. Even if one is not on a Keto diet, and I am not, I thought it sounded delicious. I like broccoli anyway. I don't have a spiralizer, so I will use angel hair pasta with broccoli on the side.

I made Savannah's bread for the potluck on Saturday, but not without some drama. The bread went together nicely. I had some unsweetened bar chocolate on hand so put that in a small pan to melt while I looked up how much sugar to add to make it semi-sweet. but got a little sidetracked on the computer. I smelled the chocolate burning. Ughh. I knew I didn't want to take a chance on it tasting ok, so dumped it and headed to the store. Thankfully, we don't live in a large town, but still---

I picked up the semi-sweet chocolate and a package of mini chocolate chips. When it was ready, I rolled it out, cut it into 3 strips, spread the cream cheese/chocolate mixture on top, and then sprinkled the mini-chocolate chips. However, I rolled the first strip and forgot the mini chips, but remembered them on the next two. I got all three on the baking sheet and tried to braid. Guess it's been awhile since I braided because it didn't look very pretty. On the second raising, I put it into the oven, and totally forgot the egg wash, which makes it shiny, so when it came out, I put butter on top, as I usually do with baked bread. All in all, it was a success, yummy and not sweet.

Anyway, back to the shrimp.

- INGREDIENTS:
 2 large heads broccoli, with long stems
 2 Tbsp olive oil, divided
 Salt and black pepper to taste
 1 Tbsp minced fresh basil
 1 pound raw shrimp, peeled & deveined
 1/2 tsp crushed red pepper
 1 Tbsp chopped fresh chives
- 2 Tbsp lemon juice
 2 Tbsp butter
 2 cloves garlic, minced
 2 Tbsp dry white wine

DIRECTIONS:
 Cut off broccoli florets and save for another use. Cut woody ends off the stems. Shave large knots off the stems using a vegetable peeler so that they are as uniform as possible. Cut into noodle using the smallest blade on a spiralizer.
 Heat 1 tablespoon olive oil in a large skillet over medium-high heat. Add broccoli noodles salt, and pepper. Toss 3 minutes. Remove from heat and set aside.
 Heat remaining olive oil and garlic in a separate skillet over medium heat. Cook one minute. Add shrimp and cook until opaque, about three minutes per side. Transfer shrimp to a bowl.
 Add wine, lemon juice, butter, basil chives, and red pepper to the skillet. Whisk over medium heat for three minutes. Return shrimp to the skillet and toss to coat.
 Spoon broccoli noodles into four serving bowls; top with shrimp mixture.

MY NOTES:
 This is a dinner that comes together quickly, even using angel hair pasta that only needs about five minutes to cook. Like most of us, thinking of something to fix is half the battle.
 I was pleased to hear from those who mentioned they made the apple puff pancakes, with one person using raspberries]
 If you have lost a recipe, feel free to send me a note at advertising@waitsburgtimes.com. Even if it's not the title, but the ingredients, I'm sure I can find it.
 ENJOY!
