Lead Levels Not Significant in Dayton School Buildings

JANUARY MEETING PLANNED FOR PARENTS, STUDENTS, AND STAFF TO DEVELOP STRATEGIC PLAN FOR DISTRICT

By Michele Smith | THE TIMES

DAYTON—Dayton School Superintendent Doug Johnson said he is delighted to share the results of recent water samplings in the school buildings. All samples taken in September returned with scores below the unsafe threshold for lead, he said. Seven of the samples were from prior water sources, which had initially scored high. The district will conduct additional sampling in the spring of 2017, until all water sources have been shown to be safe, he said. In other business during last week's school board meeting, Johnson said that a meeting has been scheduled in January to gather input from parents, students and citizens that will help the district develop a strategic plan on how best to serve the needs of students over the course of the next three to seven years. The meeting is on Jan. 25 at 5:30 p.m. in the multipurpose room and soup will be served. The district will seek financial support for adding STEM classes to the list of academic courses for middle school students, and a final decision on what will be offered will be made later in the spring. Research will be conducted by the administration, the board, and staff into the impact of poverty on education, which aligns with the district goal of student engagement, Johnson said. In his report to the board, MS/HS Principal Paul Shaber said the Outdoor Adventure Club has several trips planned, including a fall hike on the Middle Fork, ski trips, and a climbing wall adventure. The club is supported by the district and by students who wish to attend, Shaber said. Included in Principal Shaber's report was a short discussion on plans to hire a school counselor for the 2017-2018 school year, and the importance of assisting students in dealing with social and emotional issues which

Food drives brings in nearly 1,000 lbs. of food

By Dena Wood | THE TIMES

WAITSBURG – The Waitsburg Leos and Lions Clubs joined together to collect 868 pounds of food for the Waitsburg Resource Center last week. The Resource Center donates approximately 7,000 lbs. of food to families in need each year. The food drive was organized as a competition between high school classes, with the seniors taking home the win by collecting 347 lbs. of non-perishables. The junior class came in second with 267 lbs. followed by the sophomores with 134 lbs. and freshmen with 130 lbs. Students canvassed the town in teams to collect food, and members of the Lions Club followed them with vehicles. After the food was delivered, Lions members treated the students to

Ugly Campaign Presages Crisis of Government

By Albert R. Hunt, Bloomberg View

One word describes this U.S. presidential election: dismal. That has ominous implications for the important tasks of governing over the next several years.

Elections in which big issues are joined have value because they provide a governance agenda to be debated and decided.

Both sides bear responsibility for the sorry state of politics this year, but the overwhelming blame belongs to Donald Trump. He has largely waged a campaign of venom and cruel insults that was substantively shallow. If you waded through his deepest policy thoughts your ankles wouldn't get wet.

Let's suppose he wins on Nov. 8. What would be his mandate? To build a wall along the Southern border and make Mexico pay for it? Even a number of his supporters know that's a foolish fantasy. To round up and deport millions of undocumented workers? That would cost a fortune and would be socially catastrophic. To start a trade war with China, the world's second-largest economy? That would be a replay of the disastrous Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act of 1930.

All of these agenda items are at cross purposes with the priorities of House Speaker Paul Ryan and other Republican congressional leaders. The party establishment concurs with Trump's call for huge tax cuts, tilted to the wealthy, investment income and business. But conservative lawmakers want to balance those reductions with cutbacks in entitlement spending, a non-starter for the Republican nominee, who has extolled the virtues of debt.

Trump has given little indication of a health-care policy, other than to say he'd call a post-election session to repeal the Affordable Care Act. He's equally vague on national security, besides expressing his admiration for the Russian dictator Vladimir Putin, and a vow to somehow "knock the crap" out of the Islamic State. There is no Trump governing agenda.

Hillary Clinton, on the other hand, has laid out a comprehensive agenda on many issues. But in a political variation of Gresham's Law, her message often seems to have sunk to Trump's level. Can you imagine Republicans even grudgingly admitting she has a mandate to do anything?

Who are you writing in? The overwhelming allure of voting for someone who won't win

By Amy Argetsinger, The Washington Post

This election had been eating at Chris Drake. A staunch liberal in his 20s, he became a Republican by 30. But now 45 and an independent, he couldn't stomach either Hillary Clinton or Donald Trump. And despite his libertarian leanings, he decided that Gary Johnson lacked the basic "depth of knowledge" to serve as president.

Then he saw the bumper sticker. A joke, sure, but it made sense: "Neil deGrasse Tyson/Bill Nye 2016." There it was. His write-in choice for president.

"Can we just have some rational people who deal with facts and see how they do?" Drake, a software engineer in Bellevue, Nebraska, said of his dream ticket, two TV-friendly men of science. "I know it's not going to matter. No one's ever going to win a write-in vote. But I also can't not make a vote."

The write-in option may be the last refuge of an alienated but committed electorate - and this year, it's hotter than ever. Everywhere you look this season, reasonable people are putting intensely philosophical and creative thought into how, exactly, they will throw away their vote for president.

"Planz for Nov. 8," Monica Moser, a Nashville musician, wrote on Twitter recently. "Write in @CondoleezzaRice."

"Anyone else trying to write in Theo Epstein on Nov 8?" tweeted Cameron Weiss, a Los Angeles sports agent.

Other popular choices: Michelle Obama. Jon Stewart. "SNL's" Kate McKinnon. David Brown, the former Dallas police chief. Ken Bone, that random red-sweater guy from the debate. The write-in option is where our deeply felt sense of civic rights and responsibilities - we should go to the polls, we need not be constrained by the ballot options - meets our fantasy-dinner-party guest list.

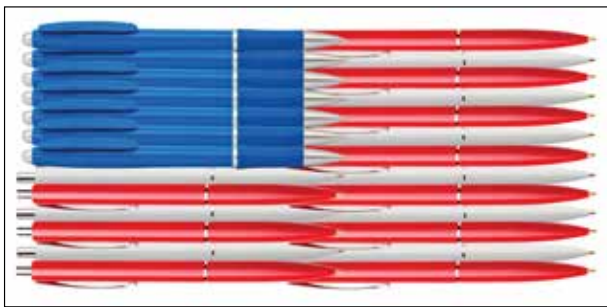

Granted, there can be a whiff of strategy behind the pipe dream. After Bernie Sanders lost the Democratic nomination, some of his die-hards tried to mount coordinated write-in campaigns. But those efforts fizzled, largely because of Sanders's utter lack of interest. (There is literally no hope of drafting some noble but reluctant hero into the White House: In most states, even write-in candidates must get themselves registered for their votes to be counted.)

Recently, write-in mania has shifted to conservative circles - an escape hatch for Never Trump stalwarts who just can't see themselves pulling a lever for a Clinton.

Ana Navarro, the GOP strategist, says she will probably write in her own mother. Mitt Romney has said he might write in his wife. Conservative columnist Charles Krauthammer wrote that "with (Nobel Peace Prize winner) Albert Schweitzer doubly unavailable (non-citizen, dead), I'm down to Paul Ryan or Ben Sasse."

More remarkable is the chorus of Republican lawmakers touting their write-in plans. It became especially fashionable after Trump's lewd groping confessions went public in an "Access Hollywood" video last month: Senators Kelly Ayotte and Rob Portman said they will write in Mike Pence, John McCain said he's considering Lindsey Graham, and Tennessee Gov. Bill Haslam vowed to cast a vote for some other Republican TBA. John Kasich's office announced Tuesday that he wrote in McCain. But months earlier, Rep. Ileana Ros-Lehtin-en was already promising to write in Jeb Bush, while Sen. Mark Kirk was talking up his vote for either David Petraeus or Colin Powell.

Of course, within these declarations lies a hidden message (Hey, guys, wouldn't it be FUN to cast a write-in vote?), designed to nudge Trump-resistant Republicans off their couches and to the polls - and, while they're busy scribbling in their fantasy pick, hopefully support their down-ballot candidates as well.

Still, the energy that people put into picking the perfect write-in is amusing, considering the utter fruitlessness.

"It's literally impossible to win a presidential election through a write-in vote," said Jan Baran, an elections lawyer with the Washington firm of Wiley Rein. That's because of the patchwork of rules governing how write-in votes are counted or whether they are even allowed at all. Nine states don't permit write-in voting for the presidential race.

So why does any voter bother to write someone in?

"Because they don't know what the rules are," Baran said. "Or they know that person is not going to be elected - so it is just therapy of some sort."

Our electoral Mad Lib may seem like a bit of polling-place whimsy, but the write-in option has deep roots. "At one time," said Edward B. Foley, a law professor at Ohio State University, "all votes were write-in votes."

Eventually, political parties started printing tickets of their anointed candidates, which voters could just shove into the ballot box. Some took to crossing out names and writing in their own picks.

Amid concerns of fraud, the United States shifted in the 1890s to government-provided ballots, with checklists of all the candidates. To accommodate old habits, they left a blank space for voters who wanted to choose someone entirely different.

Occasionally, write-in campaigns succeed. After petition snags got him thrown off the 2002 Democratic primary ballot, former D.C. Mayor Anthony Williams ran for re-election as a write-in and won. Eight write-in candidates have been elected to Congress, accord-

If she wins and the Democrats don't capture the Senate, there won't be even a short honeymoon and a long nightmare will commence. Even with a bare Senate majority, with Democrats still a minority in the House, gridlock and rancor may be the norm, given what Republicans are saying now.

Sen. Ted Cruz and even Sen. John McCain have suggested they may not confirm any Supreme Court nominees during her term. As things stand, the court has four justices appointed by Republicans, and four put in place by Democrats, who, with Hillary Clinton, will have won five of the past seven presidential elections (in six of these they carried the popular vote). There's a vacancy on the court, though a superbly qualified nominee, Judge Merrick Garland, has been stiffed by the Senate for almost eight months.

In the House, Rep. Jason Chaffetz, a Utah Republican, already is salivating over investigative opportunities with a President Hillary Clinton. It might be tempting to dismiss him as a headline-hunting hypocrite -- when a video surfaced of Donald Trump bragging, in lewd terms, about sexually assaulting women, Chaffetz rushed to TV cameras to say that in "good conscience" he couldn't support the nominee and look his 15-year-old daughter in the face. Less than three weeks later, under political pressure, he forgot his parental conscience and declared he was voting for Trump. He's the chairman of the House Oversight Committee, which gives him free rein to undertake inquiries.

Michael McCaul, the more respectable chairman of the House Homeland Security Committee, topped Chaffetz last week when he raised the specter of impeaching Clinton if she's elected. John Cornyn, the Senate Republican whip, said that might be premature -- before the election and 2 1/2 months before the next president is sworn in.

Campaigns can advance agendas. In 1980, Ronald Reagan promised to slash taxes, curb regulations and aggressively escalate defense spending. As president, he adapted to some realities -- he was more flexible than his conservative loyalists recall -- but was able to achieve what he campaigned and won on.

Similarly, in 2008, Barack Obama made clear that two of his priorities were overhauling the health care system and ending the war in Iraq. He, too, faced some different realities, such as an economy in free fall, but was able to make good on major commitments that resonated with voters.

An ugly environment and an ugly campaign make such success unlikely over the next few years. Campaigns matter.

On a personal note, I'm envious of the late David Broder, the esteemed Washington Post political writer: The first presidential race he covered was Kennedy vs. Nixon in 1960, the last was Obama in 2008. If this is my finale, the bookends are Nixon's re-election in 1972 and Donald Trump. Thank God for the four great ones in between.

ing to Richard Winger, editor of Ballot Access News, including one who unseated John F. Kennedy's grandfather in 1919.

The option certainly came in handy in 1998, when Tennessee state Sen. Tommy Burks, a Democrat, was killed just weeks before Election Day - and his GOP challenger, Byron (Low Tax) Looper, was charged with his murder. Burks was removed from the ballot, but Looper couldn't be, since he hadn't yet been convicted. So Burks's widow ran as a write-in and won, overwhelmingly. Without that option, Winger noted, "voters would have been forced to vote for a murderer."

Yet no write-ins have made a mark in presidential politics. Evan McMullin has high hopes this year: Running strong in Utah, he is balloted in 10 other states and drawing buzz among write-in enthusiasts elsewhere. But no presidential write-in candidate has, in a single state, ever won more than 2 percent - which was Ralph Nader's 2000 tally in Wyoming, one of the few places he was not on the ballot.

Is the write-in option good for democracy? The practice troubles some political theorists, because it essentially gives voters a free pass out of a tough decision.

The write-in vote undermines the process of forcing the electorate to hold its nose and just settle on a darn candidate. In a close race, it could launch the less popular of two major-party candidates to a plurality win.

But the write-in option also offers a fix for those who regard the system of winnowing the field as flawed. In 2010, Sen. Lisa Murkowski lost the Alaska GOP primary to a tea party challenger. She forged ahead as a write-in, arguing that her party's takeover by ultra-conservatives had robbed general-election voters of a real choice. And she won.

Voting, Foley said, isn't just about putting someone in office. It carries "a symbolic and expressive value" that makes it hard to dismiss a write-in vote as a wasted one.

"Unless an election comes down to a single vote, no one vote is going to be decisive," he added. "So if I decide to cast my ballot as a write-in, that may be as important symbolically as if I cast a vote for a winner or a loser in a blowout race."

That's how Mike, a defense industry executive in Northern Virginia, sees it. A lifelong Republican (whose job prevents him from speaking publicly about politics), he was alienated early on by Trump's disparaging comments about McCain's POW ordeal.

"That was unforgivable. That's not the Ronald Reagan way, that's not the Bushes' way," he said. But as for Clinton? "I just know too much about her." So in early voting, he wrote the name of retired Marine Gen. James Mattis - "a common-sense, call-it-like-it-is guy."

"Some would consider it a protest vote," he said. "I consider it a vote of conscience."

Jenni Mammen Terry, 35, a social worker in Meridian, Idaho, went a step further. Dismayed by her options - "how is this happening, when I feel like everyone I know doesn't agree with these candidates?" - she set up a Facebook page to rally support for a write-in alternative.

But who? She settled on the wrestler-turned-movie star Dwayne Johnson.

"Everybody likes The Rock," she said. "We could all get behind him, right?"

Jenni! Do you really want The Rock to be president?

Perhaps not, she conceded.

"I'm not going to vote for the lesser of the two evils," she said. "I don't have much control. But you have to feel good about your vote."

BOCC in Budget Talks for 2017

Commissioners also approve one-percent tax levy increases for next year

By Michele Smith | THE TIMES

DAYTON – The Columbia County Commissioners, County Auditor, and Department heads have been in budget discussions for the past couple of weeks.

During last week's regular commissioners' meeting, County Auditor Sharon Richter and the commissioners looked at current expenses for the preliminary 2017 budget. At the beginning of their session there was a $241,127 shortfall, but by the end, the current expense shortfall was about $200,000.

When asked about salary or COLA increases for county employees in 2017, Commissioner Dwight Robanske had this to say:

"If we are short, then the decision has to be made as to what areas we have to look at for reductions. If shortages continue, there have to be cuts somewhere.

"For instance, if District Court revenues are down, say 47%, then we ask why, and begin looking at that in budgeting," Robanske said.

"This is a very difficult time for us commissioners. None of them have enough money," he said.

Robanske said that before I-695 went into effect, there were two-thirds more dollars from the state than now.

The commissioners will continue working on the budget and have a final document for 2017 prepared before the end of the year, Robanske said.

Also during the meeting, the commissioners spoke with their special prosecuting attorney Dale Kamerrer in executive session.

When the regular session resumed, the commissioners approved a decision to allow Kamerrer to represent the BOCC in the matter of the county prosecuting attorney's appeal of their decision not to pay her attorney fees and expenses in the ongoing Columbia County lawsuit.

Also during the meeting, a public hearing was set for the 2017-2022 Transportation Improvement

Workers put the finishing touches on the new and improved Columbia County transfer station building. The main building and operational equipment sustained major damage from a fire in 2015. The transfer station will re-open on November 8. Regular winter hours are: Tuesday and Saturday from 11:00 a.m. until 4:00 p.m.

Program for Dec. 5 at 10 a.m. in the commissioners' chambers.

County Treasurer Chris Mills and Public Works Director Andrew Woods were on hand to present information about levy certification for current expenses, and for the county road levy. The commissioners authorized:

Resolution 2016-29: An increase in the regular property tax levy to be collected in the 2017 tax year. The dollar amount of the increase, over the county road actual levy amount, from 2016, will be $14,808.53, which is a 1% increase from 2016.

Resolution 2016-30: An increase in the regular property tax levy to be collected in the 2017 tax year. The dollar amount of the increase over the actual current expense levy amount, from 2016, will be $13,726.04, which is a 1% increase from 2016.

The commissioners also approved a request from Lisa Ronnberg, the Public Works Department business manager, to offer an additional health insurance option for county employees, that would include the Premera Heritage Plan, which covers some Providence Network services, she said.

Pitch It!

PORT OF COLUMBIA, DAYTON FBLA PREPARE STUDENTS FOR BUSINESS PLAN COMPETITION

By Michele Smith | THE TIMES

DAYTON - Middle school and high school students in the Dayton School District will have an opportunity to learn about entrepreneurship, and to learn ways to apply the knowledge they gain during Global Entrepreneurship Week, Nov. 14 - 18.

On Nov. 15, Bret Spooner, a managing partner of Gravis Law, PLLC, and self-described serial entrepreneur, will present all aspects of entrepreneurship to the middle and high school students.

According to Port of Columbia Economic Development Manager Brad McMasters, Joe Jacobs, Regional Director of the Washington Small Business Development Center will follow that with a presentation about "Pitch It!," which is a regional business plan competition that will take place for Dayton students in 2017.

The competition challenges students to design and develop innovative business concepts, create a realistic business model for their idea, and pitch their ideas to judges. They will do that at a preliminary competition at Walla Walla Community College in February, 2017, McMasters said.

The final competitions will take place at the GESA Powerhouse Theater the following month.

McMasters said he participated in the judging at a preliminary Pitch It! competition last year, and was highly impressed with the opportunities the competition offered to participating students.

"The Port of Columbia has chosen to help sponsor this year's competition in return for allowing Columbia County students to participate," McMasters said.

McMasters said the Port will work with Bob Cummings, FBLA instructor at Dayton High School, to encourage students and offer resources. The Port will also help with transportation to the workshops, he said.

McMasters said that Global Entrepreneurship Week is the world's largest celebration of the innovators and job creators who launch startups, bring ideas to life, drive economic growth, and expand human welfare.

"In 2015, Washington State offered more than 200 events in 39 counties, and 2016 promises to be even bigger, as communities throughout the state recognize the power of entrepreneurship, from elementary school age to senior citizens," McMaster said.

Pitch It! is a collaborative effort between the Small Business Development Center, Walla Walla Community College, Whitman College, Walla Walla University and the Port of Columbia County.

30th Annual Turkey Bingo Set for Nov. 19

By Michele Smith
THE TIMES

DAYTON—The Kiwanis Club of Dayton will hold its annual Turkey Bingo event in the Dayton Elementary School Multipurpose Room, on Saturday, Nov. 19, at 3 p.m. It's the club's biggest money maker of the year.

"Get there early if you want a good seat. We sell out every year," cautioned Kiwanian Kim Lyonnaise.

Bingo card sales begin when the doors open, and hamburgers, chili burgers, hotdogs, dessert and refreshments, will be available at 3 p.m., as well, said Lyonnaise. Games begin at 4 p.m.

"There are some dedicated and committed Bingo players in this region," said Lyonnaise, who was instrumental in organizing Turkey Bingo 30 years ago, and is still pitching it.

This year the Kiwanis Club plans to "wow" the community with the number of prizes and gift certificates that can be won.

Lyonnaise said the list of grand prizes includes an overnight stay at the Clover Island Inn in Kennewick, 18 holes of golf at Columbia Point Golf Course in Richland, two tickets to Silverwood in Idaho, lift tickets and a season pass to Ski Bluewood, two rounds of golf and a one night stay at Wildhorse Resort and Casino in Pendleton, a one night stay and massage at the Coeur d'Alene Casino and Resort in Worley, Idaho, and much more.

Other prizes were donated by Rey's Roast Coffee, Puget Sound Energy, the Wenaha Gallery, and the Dayton Historic Depot.

Gift certificates are offered by Fiesta en Jalisco, Dingle's Hardware, Blue Valley Acupuncture, Moose Creek Café, Patit Creek Restaurant, Ray's Drive-In, Rooster's Brew and the Village Shoppes.

Also, 110 turkeys have been donated through the generous support of Blue Mountain Chiropractic, Northwest Grain Growers, State Farm Insurance, Columbia REA, Broughton Land Co. and Dave Smith Motors, said Lyonnaise.

Lyonnaise said the Dayton Kiwanis Club is all about supporting kids. "One-half, or better, will go to scholarships, to further educational opportunities," he said about fundraising efforts.

This year, support will go toward scholarships for girls to participate in a new Girl Scout troop in Dayton, he said.

The state FBLA competition, the robotics club, the school band, and other after school programs, such as 4-H, have benefitted from the Kiwanis Club of Dayton's fundraising efforts, said Lyonnaise.

Lyonnaise said he would like to thank all those who donated to Turkey Bingo, especially Columbia REA, Columbia County Transportation, Rachel Cortez, Umpqua Bank, and Washington Federal Bank for their support.

can have a negative impact on learning.

Elementary school principal Pam Lindsley said that students who have had difficulty reaching ELA standards have benefitted from the purchase of intervention materials.

She said that progress monitoring scores on STARS assessment has shown growth.

Lindsley credits the hard work of her staff, who are spending time away from the classroom to train in the appropriate use of the materials.

Ninety-five percent of parents were able to attend recent parent teacher conferences, Lindsley said.

Elementary teachers are researching math curricula, and many vendors are in the process of aligning with Common Core standards, which has made the search challenging, she said.

School enrollment continues to increase, Superintendent Johnson said. Preliminary reports indicate an enrollment number approaching 430, and the full time equivalent is near 412, he said.

Frohreich is Council Student Rep.

WHS SENIOR IS EXCITED TO REPRESENT STUDENT OPINIONS AT COUNCIL MEETINGS

By Dena Wood | THE TIMES

WAITSBURG – Waitsburg High School senior Timber Frohreich will be sworn in as Waitsburg City Council's student representative at the regular Nov. 16 council meeting.

Frohreich said she applied for the position to take advantage of the opportunity to better learn how the community operates and runs.

"Many of our students are deeply involved in our small town's life, and I'd like to become even more involved by joining the city council's team. I feel I am well prepared for this position from my experiences in FFA and Leo's. Through both of these organizations I've gained public speaking and presentation skills," Frohreich said.

"I plan to expand my skills and use them in the monthly meetings, along with giving the student body's thoughts and opinions. Most of all, I'd love to bring the knowledge and passion of our high school to the attention of our city as a whole," she added.

Frohreich has participated in athletics throughout her high school career. She plays varsity volleyball, and is in her third year of cheerleading. This will be Frohreich's fourth spring to play softball, and she served as team captain last year.

She is a four-year FFA member and served as student body secretary last year. She served as Leo's club president last year and is secretary this year. She is currently senior class president and has served on both the prom and homecoming committees.

Frohreich will be the sixth student representative to serve on Waitsburg's City Council. Student representatives do not vote, but do offer input on council decisions and report on student-related events and issues.

Previous representatives include: Fletcher Baker (2011), Logan Dozier (2012), Meara Baker (2013), Emma Philbrook (2014), and Stuart Walsh (2015).

"I'm so grateful for this opportunity and can't wait to see where it will lead me," Frohreich said.

Artist Leiv Fagereng Shows Work in Waitsburg

By Dena Wood | THE TIMES

WAITSBURG – Visitors to Dynamite Art + Coffee, located on the north end of Waitsburg's Main Street, will be able to enjoy the art of Walla Walla artist Leiv Fagereng, whose works will be on display through Nov. 27.

Fagereng's large, richly colored oil paintings are a feast for the eyes that provide food for thought.

"I like to have more questions than answers in my artwork, which is why I give it a surrealistic twist. I appreciate hearing what viewers think of my work, more than what I have to say about it," Fagereng said.

Fagereng hails from a family of artists, craftsmen, and musicians from the Portland, Ore. area, and says he has been painting on a daily basis since 1990. A classically trained oil painter, he studied at the Art Institute of Chicago and in Madrid, Spain.

Fagereng said he is unique as a painter in that he enjoys taking on challenges and has the ability to paint subject matter from landscapes and wildlife to anatomical studies to technology.

"A lot of painters focus on one thing, but I like to bounce around and keep the spark fresh," Fagereng said.

He loves to use a large canvas, and his paintings are laden with detail.

"I want the viewers to keep finding things in the paintings. I think that the best music, novels, and art all allow you to keep finding new things to focus on in the work," Fagereng said.

"I received a great compliment last week when a couple I sold a painting to six years ago told me they still find little details they hadn't noticed before," he added.

Visitors to Waitsburg's Dynamite Art + Coffee enjoy chatting beneath one of Leiv Fagereng's richly colored and detailed oil paintings. Fagereng's work will be on display at the coffee shop through Nov. 27.

When asked to describe his work, Fagereng said curators have referred to it as pop surrealism, or even baroque era pop.

Fagereng likened his paintings to poetry or a novel, saying that writers don't always know where the work will take them when they first start a piece. He finds inspiration in a quote by mid-century painter Edward Hopper, who said, "If you can say it in words, there would be no reason to paint."

Fagereng said each painting takes six to nine months to complete but that the effort is worth it because they are so rich in detail and distinctive in style.

Several of the pieces on display at Dynamite Art + Coffee involve birds and airplanes. Fagereng said the bird paintings honor his grandfather, who was an Audubon member and taught his grandchildren all about birds and bird calls.

Two jet paintings on display were inspired by the mystery surrounding the loss of Malaysian Airlines Flight 370. Fagereng's works portray speculations that the planes either flew high enough or low enough to evade radar. In one piece, a plane nearly touches the stars, while in the other, it flies low across the ocean.

A piece with an American Flag and an F16 jet makes a statement about war profiteering and how wars are often fought for reasons of economic stability, Fagereng said. An image of the Nasdaq symbol imposed over the flag brings home the point.

Fagereng recently moved to Walla Walla from Seattle. He also works at Passatempo Taverna, the newly opened Italian restaurant and bar operated by mixologist Jim German and restaurateur Mike Easton, located in the former Pastime Café building.

Fagereng has been longtime friends with German and Dynamite Coffee owner Claire Johnston, as well as many other former Seattleites that have moved to the area. He said he came to visit often and grew to love the area enough that he decided to move here. He also has family in Summerville, and is very familiar with the area.

Fagereng said German gave him carte blanche to hang his art in the former jimgermanbar, now Dynamite Art + Coffee, where he sold several pieces.

"It's fun coming back to Dynamite because it's an exhibition space I know and love. There is nothing better than friends selling your work because they are passionate about it," he said.

Fagereng sells his paintings nationally and recently had a piece placed in the Racine Art Museum in Wisconsin. A portfolio of his works can be found online at www.leivfagereng.com.

a hamburger dinner at the Lions building.

In addition to providing food to families in need, the Waitsburg Resource Center supplies snacks for the summer reading program, provides meals and activities for students during winter school break, and meets the needs of high school students through a backpack program.

The WRC has also sponsored a summer activity program, provided free bicycle helmets to children, sponsored mobile dental van visits, and school visits from dental hygienists.

Most recently, the WRC committed to funding weekend meals to needy elementary students through Second Harvest's "Bite 2 Go" program. Fourteen students are currently participating in that program.

The WRC is a nonprofit, volunteer-run organization and is supported through donations. Financial and food donations are always welcome and can be delivered during regular center hours.

The WRC is located at 106 Preston Ave. (on the side of the Banner Bank building) and is open Saturdays from 9-11 a.m. and Thursdays from 2-4 p.m. The WRC serves families in the Waitsburg and Prescott school districts.

Hubbard to Reduce Practice Load

WAITSBURG – The doors to Hubbard Law Office remain open, but second-generation Waitsburg Attorney Michael V. Hubbard may be a little harder to find these days.

He's not retiring, but Hubbard said he is no longer keeping office hours. He is available by appointment, and will accept work on a case-by-case basis.

Hubbard said the law office has been operated by a succession of attorneys since territorial days, according to late Waitsburg historian Bettie Chase. Hubbard will continue to meet with clients by appointment.

Clients can still reach Hubbard via the same office number at (509) 337-6643, which will be answered by a phone service.

Attorney Julie Karl maintains Karl Law Office out of the Hubbard Law building and can be reached at (509) 382-3137 or by email at julie@karllawoffice.com.

TEENY MCMUNN: MY RECIPE BOX

Braised Balsamic Chicken

We made this for dinner a few nights ago. Joe enters the ingredients we have on hand, then Googles for a recipe. The ongoing quest to think of something for dinner. Thankfully, most times, it creates leftovers. We served this over wide noodles and it was very tasty.

6 skinless, boneless chicken breast halves
1/2 c. balsamic vinegar
1 tsp garlic salt
Ground black pepper to taste
2 Tbsp. olive oil
1 onion, thinly sliced
1 (14.5oz) can diced tomatoes

1 tsp dried basil
1 tsp dried oregano
1 tsp dried rosemary
1/2 tsp dried thyme
1/2 c. red wine (opt)

Season both sides of chicken breasts with garlic salt and pepper. Heat olive oil in a skillet over medium heat: cook seasoned chicken breasts until chicken is browned, 3 to 4 minutes per side. Add onion, cook and stir until onion is browned, about 3 to 4 minutes.

Pour diced tomatoes and balsamic vinegar over chicken, season with basil, oregano, rosemary, and thyme. Simmer until chicken is no longer pink and the juices run clear, about 15 minutes. An instant-read thermometer inserted into the center should read at least 165 degrees.

MY NOTES:

We used only three chicken breasts, as they were large. We could have split them horizontally for thinner breasts. I think if one wanted to use six large chicken breasts, then perhaps double the sauce so that you have enough to put over noodles.

We thicken the sauce. Joe often uses chicken gravy that is bought in a large container (from Costco) to thicken. The red wine was not in the recipe, but seemed to bring out the flavors. Mushrooms were also added, but optional.

Enjoy
