State Allocates $1.7 Million for Main Street Bridge

FLOOD HAZARD WILL FINALLY BE REPLACED AFTER 90 YEAR LIFE

By Dena Wood | THE TIMES

WAITSBURG - June ended on a high note for the City of Waitsburg when the Washington State Legislature appropriated $1.7 million to replace Waitsburg's Main Street Bridge. That funding was secured in the 2015-17 capital budget approved in Olympia on June 30.

City Administrator Randy Hinchliffe said he has been working to see the bridge replaced for three to four years and that the city has been working on it, off and on, for the better part of a decade.

In addition to being narrow, the 90-year-old bridge, located on the north end of Waitsburg's Main Street, is built in such a way that it creates a flood hazard, Hinchliffe said. The bottom side of the bridge is arched so that when high waters come, they hit the arch and back up, causing a choke point in the Touchet River.

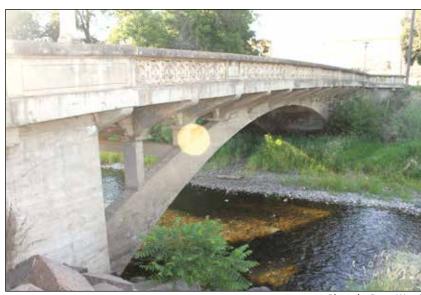

Hinchliffe said bridges are categorized by the state as one of two types: functionally obsolete and structurally deficient. Only structurally deficient bridges are eligible for transportation funds. Waitsburg's bridge falls in the obsolete category and doesn't qualify.

In February, Hinchliffe testified before the Senate Ways & Means Committee in Olympia, in support of Public Works Trust Fund (PWTF) construction loans. The city applied for a $600,000 PWTF loan, and was working with the Corps of Engineers to fund the rest of the project.

When Governor Inslee's budget came through, only the top ten projects made the cut with the Main Street Bridge stripped from the budget.

Though attractive, the arch under Waitsburg's Main Street bridge creates a choke point which makes the bridge a flood hazard.

The Dayton City Council will consider a new ordinance to tie to new state law

By Dian Ver Valen THE TIMES

DAYTON – The city of Dayton is considering allowing licensed all-terrain vehicles, or ATVs, on city streets. City Clerk Trina Cole said she has drafted an ordinance, with input from the council's safety committee, that will go before the city council, and the community at three public hearings, before the council will vote on it. The first hearing will be the Monday meeting next week at 7 p.m.

Dayton resident and ATV aficionado Matt Wiens spoke to the city council last month urging city leaders to allow these vehicles on the city's roadways.

"I'm just trying to get them to allow ATV riders to legally use the roads," Wiens said. "We're hoping they'll allow them on all or a majority of city streets to avoid confusing tourists and to make it easier for law enforcement."

Wiens, who spoke before the city council and with The Times for this story as a private citizen, is also a deputy with the Columbia County Sheriff's Office.

The Washington State Legislature passed house bill 1632 into law in 2013. The bill, sponsored by State Rep. Matt Shea, R-Spokane Valley, was intended to expand all-terrain vehicle access and positively affect the economy throughout the state.

"This bill is a collaborative effort of all-terrain vehicle riders, the environmental coalition, ORV and ATV dealers, city and county governments, and Republicans and Democrats alike," Shea said

Waitsburg plans first-ever National Night Out event

By Dena Wood | THE TIMES

WAITSBURG - Waitsburg residents will want to mark their calendars now for the evening of Tuesday, August 4. Each year, on the first Tuesday in August, over 37 million people, across the nation, participate in National Night Out, an anti-crime and anti-drug event. And this year, for the first time, Waitsburg will be joining in Waitsburg city councilmember Deb Callahan and Fire District No. 2 Fire Commissioner Deb Fortner are organizing the event which will take place at Preston Park on the evening of August 4. The event will feature a variety of attractions as well as free hotdogs and drinks, sponsored by the Waitsburg Firemen's Associa-

The Waitsburg Clinic staff will perform blood pressure checks and the Waitsburg fire department will be on site with a fire truck, teaching fire safety. The Walla Walla County Sheriff's office will have a booth and may bring their patrol boat and teach boat safety.

Callahan said they are working on getting commitments for more booths such as one for bicycle safety and helmet checks and a voter's registration booth. They also plan to have a free swim night at the city pool.

Callahan said all volunteers are welcome, especially individuals or groups that would like to do balloon animals, face painting, children's games or the like. Volunteers should call Deb Callahan at 520-0607.

OUTBACK ROCK VBS

Thirty-two kids attended the three-day "Outback Rock" Vacation Bible School hosted jointly by the Waitsburg Christian and the Waitsburg Presbyterian Churches. Thirteen adults, 14 middle and high school crew leaders and a "slew of volunteers" that provided snacks, props and muscial talent made this year's program possible, said Pam Conover. Participants had fun making hand washing kits (that looked like kangaroos) for the YWCA Women's Shelter, doing crafts, and learning Bible verses and praise songs. Left: Marshall Nechedom explained (and later demonstrated) how to play the didgeridoo to "Mr. Digby" (aka Paul Ihle).

COMMENTARY

KEN GRAHAM: FROM THE PUBLISHER

WASHINGTON LEGISLATURE SLOGS ON

ast week, the Washington State Legislature was within hours of passing a biennial budget, wrapping up business and going home. But a glitch developed at the last minute. Here's how State Representative Terry Nealey, of Dayton, put it in an email message:

out of balance by $2 billion -- threatening K-12 education funding, recently-enacted tuition reductions for students and our social safety nets. This is very unfortunate. The bottom line is Senate Democrats went back on their word at the worst possible time. Handshakes should mean something in Olympia. The Senate Democrats broke trust, betrayed both Democrats and Republicans and, most importantly, jeopardized bipartisan state spending plans that are important to so many people and communities. I voted to suspend I-1351 because the operating budget includes $350 million for smaller class sizes for K-3, and the capital budget includes $200 million for

The legislature has been called back for a third special session, which will run through this month. The new biennium has begun and the state officially has no budget.

Nealey also reported that the legislature passed a transportation package:

It was a difficult decision for me because I know no one wants to pay more at the pump, but I voted for the bill because it will support critical infrastructure in our state. It will also fund important projects in the 16th District, including: US-12/Walla Walla corridor improvements, the I-82 West Richland - Red Mountain interchange; the Palouse rail load-out improvements; the Lewis Street Bridge in Pasco; and the 9th Street Plaza roundabout.

CITY HOPES POOL TO OPEN MONDAY

WAITSBURG - Waitsburg's city crew worked quickly to repair problems with the installation of the city pool's new liner last week. Rough patches of fiberglass were sanded down and the pool is being refilled. If all goes as planned, the pool should be open for business on Monday afternoon, July 13, according to City Administrator Randy Hinchliffe.

JULY CITY COUNCIL, SCHOOL BOARD MEETING CHANGES

WAITSBURG - Both Waitsburg City Council and the Waitsburg School Board have changed their meeting dates for July. The City Council will meet at 7 p.m., Thursday, July 16, rather than the regularly scheduled July 15 meeting date. Meetings are held at the Lions Memorial Building at the Waitsburg Fairgrounds.

The Waitsburg School Board will meet Wed., July 15, at 7 p.m. rather than on July 22, as regularly scheduled. The Waitsburg School District's 2015-16 Budget Hearing in scheduled for Wednesday, July 29 at 7 p.m. Meetings are held in the Preston Hall Middle School Board Room.

Hinchliffe later contacted Senator Mike Hewitt who was able to bring funding through the Senate, as part of the capital budget. Hinchliffe also lobbied representatives Terry Nealey, Maureen Walsh, Norm Johnson and Susan Fagan for support from the House.

They came together and the project got on both lists and got approved," he Hinchliffe said the $1.7 million appropriation should be enough to fully fund the bridge replacement with some left for contingencies.

"I'm waiting on a letter from the state letting me know how to access the funds. Then we'll get an engineer on board and, if everything works out right, it should happen next year," Hinchliffe said.

In a press release, Sen. Hewitt said, "The Main Street Bridge has served for 90 years; unfortunately the choke point it creates in the Touchet River has turned the bridge into a flood hazard. There is strong competition for the limited dollars available for capital improvements, so I am glad about being able to put this project on the list."

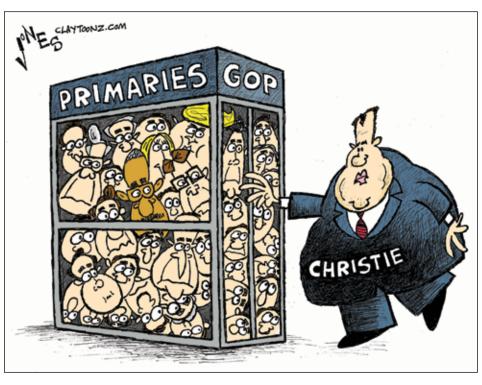

I respect the opinions of those who are not happy about a gas tax increase. In the end, I felt the package was a good deal for the communities that elected me to serve them. It is also vital for freight mobility and our trade-dependent economy. Washington State is uniquely positioned to compete in the global marketplace. Our farmers and businesses need a reliable state transportation system -- especially into our ports.

The transportation investment package also prevents the governor from taking executive action on establishing a low carbon fuel standard that would drive up the cost of fuel. This is an important protection for consumers. We were also able to pass some transportation reforms that will help with cost containment and accountability.

Senate Bills 5988 (projects) and 5989 (bonds) are part of the unfinished business of the Legislature and will need to be voted on to move the final transportation investment package forward.

Hopefully we can report in the next two or three weeks that the state has a budget and the legislature can begin preparing for the fights to come in next year's session.

WAITSBURG PLANNING AND HISTORIC PRESERVATION COMMISH. OPENINGS

WAITSBURG - The Waitsburg Planning Commission is looking to fill two seats on the seven-position board. Commission chairman, William Polotochio and commission member Marie Gagnon have recently resigned their positions.

The commission currently consists of K.C. Kuykendall, who is also a city council member, Karen Stanton-Gregutt and recently appointed members Larry Johnson, Brian Callahan and Stan Bly who took seats in January. A new chairman will be selected from within the commission.

The Planning Commission will review progress of the proposed Whoopemup Meadows subdivision, should that project move forward. City Administrator Randy Hinchliffe said developer Gene Warren indicated that the subdivision will be on hold until the new Columbia Pulp facility near Lyons Ferry Bridge is underway.

The five-person Historic Preservation Committee also has a vacant seat to fill. Current committee members include Wendy Richards, John Stellwagen, Delores Nettles and Jeff Broom. The Historic Preservation Committee reviews and approves or denies applications for improvements to buildings on the Main Street historic corridor.

It is expected that the committee will soon review plans for renovations to the former Farmer's Café building.

Applications for both the Planning Commission and the Historic Preservation Committee may be picked up at Waitsburg City Hall.

DAYTON

when proposing the bill several years ago. "It will have an economic impact of an estimated $50 million, bringing people back to Washington State to enjoy off-road vehicle recreation, giving our disabled veterans more places to ride, expanding the use for our agriculture and timber industries, and creating countless new jobs while protecting the environment."

The bill addresses allowed usage of "wheeled all-terrain vehicles" or WATVs, which include four wheelers and utility-type vehicles.

"The problem has been Washington's overly restrictive laws concerning the use of off-road vehicles and all-terrain vehicles," Shea said. "This is a very popular sport and there are places just outside of many of our rural communities where people bring these vehicles to ride. But state law prohibits them from operating these vehicles on any public roadways. So they cannot ride into town to have lunch, buy gas or do any shopping. That's pushed a lot of these folks to go over the borders to Idaho and Oregon where they can ride. This measure will bring them back to Washington."

The bill provides for decisions to be made at the local level regarding usage of WATVs, which is where Wiens' request and Dayton City Council's response comes into the picture.

"The new law would allow local jurisdictions to have their say of whether to open local roads up to this usage and designate which would be open for these all-terrain vehicles," Shea said.

The bill requires WATVs to display a metal tag on the rear of the vehicle. Those who wish to use their WATVs for on-road use must register and receive an on-road tab to display on their vehicle.

The bill contains accountability measures to protect private property owners as well as public lands from abuse. It expands exemptions for on-road WATV operations for emergency management purposes and for the production of timber and agriculture products. However, the bill does not allow WATVs to be operated on state highways outside of city limits, and it contains certain restrictions involving the ability of the vehicles to cross a public roadway.

"The state law makes WATV use on county roads with posted speeds of 35 miles per hour automatically allowed," Wiens said. "But cities, even small cities, aren't automatically in the program. They have to pass an ordinance saying they're going to allow the WATVs on the roads."

Wiens did not want to speak on behalf of the sher-streets in many rural areas of the U.S.

iff's office on this matter, since he has been pursuing the issue as a private citizen, but Undersheriff Richard Loyd told The Times that the sheriff's office "doesn't feel that allowing these WATVs on city streets will be an issue."

Washington licensed WATVs require just as much safety equipment – inspected and certified by a registered dealer - as do street-legal motorcycles, Loyd said.

Street-legal all-terrain vehicles are a fixture on the

STATE RULES FOR WHEELED ALL-TERRAIN VEHICLES:

[All information taken from the Washington State Department of Licensing Website at dol.wa.gov]

All wheeled all-terrain vehicles meeting the definition below, are required to display a metal tag. To ride your wheeled all-terrain vehicle (WATV) on approved public roads, streets and highways in permitted counties you'll need a metal tag with an on-road tab.

WATVs that need a metal tag

A motorized, non-highway vehicle with handle bars

- * That is 50 inches or less in width.
- *Have a seat height of at least 20 inches.
- *Weighs less than 1,500 pounds. *Has 4 tires with diameters of 30 inches or less.

- A utility-type vehicle designed for, and capable of, travel over designated roads that:
- *Has 4 or more low-pressure tires of 20 psi or less.
- *Is less than 74 inches wide.
- *Weighs less than 2,000 pounds.
- *Has a wheelbase of 110 inches or less.
- *Meets 1 or more of the following:
- *Is at least 50 inches wide.
- *Weighs at least 900 pounds.
- *Has a wheelbase of over 61 inches.
- How to get a WATV metal tag:

Visit a vehicle licensing office location If you've completed all the steps to modify your WATV for on-road use, we'll add "modified for on-road use" to the vehicle registration.

As a WATV owner you're required to:

*Attach the metal tag on the back of the WATV.

Sign the registration and carry it when driving the WATV. Meet the off-road requirements, get an off-road tab to put on metal tag. Fee is $18*.

Meet the on-road requirements, get both an on-road and an off-road tab and put on metal tag. Fee is $12. Replace your metal tag every 7 years. Fee is $2*.

* Fee doesn't include filing

Steps to modify your WATV for on-road use:

Make sure the vehicle has the following equipment installed. See RCW 46.09.457 -

*Head lamp – used whenever you're driving on a road.

- *Tail lamp.
- *2 Tail lamps For utility-type vehicles.
- *Stop lamp.
- *Reflectors.
- *Turn signals.
- *Brakes in working order.
- *Mirror on left or right handlebar. *2 Mirrors - For utility-type vehicles.
- *Horn or warning device.
- *Spark arrester and muffling device. *Windshield, unless the driver wears glasses, goggles, or a face shield that meets the requirements by the state patrol. *Seatbelts – For utility-type vehicles.

Have a WA licensed WATV dealer or repair shop inspect the vehicle. They'll complete Part 1 and sign the Wheeled All-Terrain Vehicle Road Use Declaration form.

Your safety inspection cost can't be more than $50. Take the following to a vehicle licensing office:

*The Wheeled All-Terrain Vehicle Road Use Declaration

*A copy of the receipt showing you paid for the inspection – attached to form.

*The vehicle's title – If your bank has the title, contact them to get it and the road use declaration submitted.

Note: All equipment must meet the requirements within Chapter 46.09 RCW.

Do I need a driver license to operate a WATV on a public roadway?

Yes. It must be valid and you must comply with all applicable rules of the road, except that wheeled all-terrain vehicles may not be operated side-by-side in a single lane of traffic.

Do I need a motorcycle endorsement?

After School Program in the Works

LEADERS IN DAYTON SEEK FUNDING THAT IS SUSTAINABLE FOR THE LONG TERM

By Dian Ver Valen | THE TIMES

DAYTON - For several months, community leaders have discussed plans for an after school program for Dayton school children. Planning has been a collaborative effort, and funding has not yet been secured, but the ball is still rolling.

School officials tried, at the end of the school year, for a grant to help fund the program but were unsuc-

"I think it would be a good thing to continue planning to meet and discuss options for the future of some type of program," Superintendent Doug Johnson wrote in an email last week.

The Dayton School Board will hear from Johnson on after school program progress at their board meeting this week.

Meanwhile, the Coalition for Youth and Families has formed a task force of community members interested in helping this plan move forward. Parents and key community leaders are on this task force, including Columbia County Commissioner Dwight Robanske, who says the county is very supportive of an afterschool program.

"One issue is sustainability," said coalition director Peggy Gutierrez. "We can probably get grants for that first year, but what about after that?'

A dormant community non-profit group, the Community Network, has been revived to help with the funding of the program, Gutierrez said. Any grant money received will need a 501c3 to receive and disperse the funds, and the Community Network fits the bill.

Jody Martin, a member of the task force, has been using her network of contacts through the Columbia County Hospital District and Columbia Cares, a local non-profit, to connect program planners with a consultant from the Eastern Washington Critical Access Hospital Network to discuss the development of a strategic plan for implementing an after school pro-

"That network has access to funds to pay for developing the strategic plan but cannot pay for any of the program costs," Gutierrez said. "Once we have the strategic plan developed, we can pursue a variety of local funds to support the program."

Organizers estimate that it will cost approximately $35,000 to pay for a minimal staff to run an after school program. In-kind contributions from the school district would equal about $20,000 additionally – for use of the facilities as well as basic supplies (paper, copy machine, pencils, markers, etc.). And high school student volunteer hours anticipated come to about 50 hours per week for 36 weeks, equaling approximately $18,000.

Planners are determined to create a sustainable after school program in Dayton. "The state has said we can divert some money to support a program, but we can't hold all the weight," said Commissioner Robanske. "The commissioners are passionate about this."

Robanske and other commissioners have stated before that money and time spent on children in programs such as this prevents the county from spending thousands of dollars on juvenile detention and rehabilitation.

"Our kids have way too much time on their hands," said Kate Wenzl at the June coalition meeting. Wenzl has been the district's interim secondary principal. "It's going to take community engagement and coordination. We need to work smarter, not harder. We've all gotta be part of the solution on this."

Building Race Cars in 'The Center of the Universe'

Chuck Carruthers' secrets to success are hard work, honesty and not taking himself too seriously

By Dena Wood | THE TIMES

PRESCOTT - "I'm one of the luckiest guys in the world. I don't know how I ended up where I did, but I sure am glad," said NASCAR race car builder and crew chief, Chuck Carruthers.

After 40 years in the industry, Carruthers is more than satisfied with life in Prescott, also known as "The Center of the Universe" on his business attire, website, and even the company car.

Carruthers began building cars on the side, while attending Cal Poly Pomona College as a mechanical engineering major in the early 1970s.

"When I was in college, a friend and I thought we could build race cars and we weren't smart enough to know that you really had to know something to do it," Carruthers said. He and Bob Burchard built "a pretty good business" working out of Burchard's father's machine shop.

In 1975, Carruthers left school to run the Armstrong Motor Sports race team out of Modesto, Calif. He spent three years as crew chief on the nine-man team, which built all their own cars, before going to work for a chassis builder in Modesto. In 1985, he and a partner opened their own shop in Winters, Calif., where he stayed until 1991.

Carruthers said he ended up in Prescott because he "didn't read a contract really well." He went into a meeting planning to buy out his partner, but the meeting ended with him being bought out instead. That same contract included a non-compete clause that prevented him from building cars in California, Oregon, Idaho or Nevada. "Everything but Washington," he said.

Carruthers purchased his current shop in Prescott, a former McGregor Company building in 1991 and has been here ever since. Having grown up in Seatonville, Ill. (his family moved to Fontana, Calif. midway through his senior year of high school) with a population of 400, Carruthers felt right at home with small town life.

Chuck Carruthers Industries serves a core group of about 60 customers that Carruthers says he tries to be personally available to test and race with. Customers order cars in all stages, from parts, to a body mounted on a chassis, to a complete car with Carruthers overseeing its first race on the track.

Carruthers' cars won NASCAR Regional Touring Series championships in 2003, 2004 and 2005. The cars were owned by recently deceased Mesa, Wash, grape farmer Rick Allison, who Carruthers calls "one of the best car owners you could ever have." Jeff Jefferson drove the cars for the team, that ran out of Carruthers' shop.

"They were tremendously successful. Those opportunities (ample financing and a talented driver) don't come along all the time. Sometimes when you're in the middle of it, you don't have time to think of how much fun you're having," Carruthers said.

After 40 years in the business, Carruthers still loves what he does. "In the racing industry there is always something new, always something to think about, always something you're working on. That part is way cool," he said.

"Anyone who works in the racing industry is competitive. Races are hard to win. I liken it to when you're in high school and you take a test on Friday, but only one person gets to pass. Finishing second is better than finishing third, but the guy that wins is really the only one," he said.

Carruthers says has seen the racing industry through the 70's oil embargo, where he sat at his desk wishing the phone would ring, and the 1980's recession. "I survived through all of that. I kid everyone that I just outlived everybody else," he said.

"I have literally built race cars for people, built race cars for their sons and built race cars for their gran That's pretty neat."

Carruthers chalks his long-term success up to two important lessons he learned from his parents. "You have to be honest and you have to work hard. After that, it just came," he said.

"Racing is always evolving. We do a tremendous amount of research and development. The more you do, the more you stay ahead of the curve. But that just goes back to working hard," he added.

Over the years, Carruthers has traveled the country as crew chief for several teams and he and NASCAR broadcaster Larry McReynolds spent many years giving racing workshops all along the west coast. But these days he con-

A single combine was working in a field off of Ferris Road, south of Waitsburg on Tuesday. This year's start of harvest is one of the earliest ever.

Photos by Dena Wood Top: Carruthers said his wife, Danielle, convinced him to swap his truck for a car that got better gas mileage, hence the Chevy HHR. He said he woke up one day to find the hood of the car missing. He later got a call from Don Mooney of Walla Walla who copped to taking the hood. "If you're going to drive a car that ugly, you at least need to have flames on it," said Mooney, who added his special touch. Above: Carruthers' computer screensaver is a shot of the sunset as seen from the deck of his winter home in the West Indies. Carruthers said that no one has ever seen him wear shorts in the continental U.S. but that on Montserrat, that is all he wore. Except when he was invited to dinner with the governor. And then the governor was wearing shorts.

siders travel the worst part of the Carruthers said his wife, Danielle, who he insists is "the real story," has it the worst. As a technical inspector for NASCAR's Camping World, Xfinity and Sprint Cup series, Danielle is gone Thursday through Monday, 36 weeks of the year. The two met on the race circuit when she was living in San Diego, and were married in 1999.

"Danielle's story is much more fascinating than mine," Carruthers said. "She was the very first female ever hired by NASCAR. When I started in the racing business in the 1970's there were signs when you went into the garage area - 'No Women.' My wife was the first one that ever broke through that," he

Carruthers recalled the late 70's and early 80's when he would travel to Australia every year and race from Boxing Day until the first of April. "It was a blast – the most fun you could ever have," Carruthers said. "But the older you get, the more you want to just go home and sit on the porch - and I never thought I would be that way," he added.

Today, that "porch" is 10 miles outside Prescott and sits on 30 acres of countryside where he and Danielle enjoy spending evenings with their horses, cows and dogs. "There's nothing more relaxing than saddling up a horse and going for a ride," Carruthers said.

Well, there might be one thing more relaxing. And that would be spending time at the home the Carruthers' recently purchased on the island of Montserrat in the West Indies. At 63, Carruthers is moving toward retirement and hopes to start spending his winters there.

"This is a great place to live but I hate the winters. If I left right after we finished the Thanksgiving dinner dishes and didn't come back until the first of May, it wouldn't bother me a bit," Carruthers said.

But Carruthers has planted deep roots and has no plans for leaving the area permanently. He is currently chairman of the Walla Walla County Planning Commission, served as Prescott's mayor from 1996 to 2000, has served on the Prescott Joint Parks & Rec. board and the school board and is a volunteer for the city fire department.

Carruthers says giving back to the community is another lesson he learned growing up in Seatonville, Ill. "My dad was mayor and fire chief, my uncle was mayor; that's just a normal part of what you did. If you lived there, you were part of the town," he said.

"A guy like me, in the race car business, in the scheme of things it doesn't amount to anything. It's entertainment. I don't ever take myself too seriously. I often thought that being on the Prescott School Board was more important than building race cars. You just don't want to take yourself too seriously," Carruthers said.
